The farmers in the hualapai basin are against regulating the groundwater. Of course they are, they have unfettered access to all the water they want. Much of their farmland has not been activated, and they already use three times as much as residential use. They are not even required to report their usage. The cost of mitigation, injection wells, for instance, will put an undue burden on taxpayers. The mining of our water aquifer is unacceptable and the dust problems from the disturbed farmland increases every year. I support an INA for the hualapai basin. Sincerely, Mary Anne Lynes, Kingman Arizona
